No Letup . . .

If the Soviets really mean what they have been saying about peace and friendship so much of late, certainly one of the places to start in translating their words into deeds would be in their subversive activities in other lands.

But Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency ((CIA) of this country and who should know the lay of the land in that regard better than almost anyone else in the United States, said the other day that he saw "not a bit" of evidence that the Moscow Reds have relaxed efforts at subversion of the free world.

"Looking at the hard evidence that we have, I don't see that we have any real reason to believe that certainly in the covert field and the field of subversion, there's been any relaxation whatsoever."

That and other strong evidence shows the Russians are playing the same old game, even though they're now playing it with smiles instead of scowls.

And without any relaxation of the Soviet purpose, there should not be any relaxation of the free world's guard.
